ELECTRIC LIGHT BATHS.

said to Be Better Than the Turkish and Much Cheaper. The latest thing in therapeutics, or the reatment of disease, is the electric light bath, which is now a pronounced success. Dr. J. H. Kellogg of Michigan, who has one of the finest electrical plants in the country, was the inventor of the bath. Recently it has been taken up by the medical savants of Germany as one of the most potential therapeutic agents of modern times. No patent rights are reserved and any sufferer may have the bath in his own house.

This new method of applying heat to the body, using as its source the incandescent light, produces physiologic effects, reports the Chicago Chronicle, far superior to either the Turkish or Russian baths, which are recommended in so many cases of chronic or obstinate ailments. The electric light bath stimulates the elimination from the body in a marked degree of carbonic acid gas, and carbonic acid gas is the polson that goes through the lungs and into the blood, causing in the system all sorts of trouble. The amount of perspiration produced by the electric light is double that induced by

One plan of bath is adopted to the application of heat to a circumscribed part of the body, as the trunk, the feet or the spine. The electric light bath is said to be the best of all substitutes for muscular activity. For persons whose business or profession keeps them indoors it is the most invaluable means of maintaining health. It is complete in itself, requiring no greater expense in installation than the running of two small wires for a short distance. The bath can be placed in the back room of an office, or for private use may be placed in a bedroom they can claim the tobacco if they prefer or an ordinary bathroom. Another very it. This is probably the only place in the great advantage is the very trifling expense involved in the maintenance of the bath. meaningless to the people whose use of the language or contact with the people who speak it had coased several years ago. The concert hall and the laboratory, the workshop and the barroom, all contribute toward the stock of new words, says the New York Tribune, and science as well as commerce gives rise to words which in many instances reach the dictionaries. But while this may be true of many words, more live a season and then die. In order to determine what shall be done with the new words the dictionary makers allow them to "grow and ripen" in cabinets made for that purpose. These cabinets consist of a series of boxes, one for each letter in the alphabet, and into these boxes the new words are placed, together with all matter pertaining to them, until such time as a new or revised edition of the dictionary is to be issued, and then the accumulated novelties in the way of words are carefully examined, and those that are found worthy are given a place in the new edition and become a part of the language. The scientific publications furnish much of the material for the word cabinets, but there are other and peculiar sources. The man who delivers a lecture before a backwoods debating society, and who earns from his fellow members the distinction of having "coined" a word, usually sends the word with the laudatory remark of his townspeople to the dictionary maker; the man who makes a new shoe polish, tooth wash, skirt binding or machine, and invents a name to describe the novelty, makes efforts to advertise his invention by having the name become a part of the dictionary, and the consequence is that the stock of that class of words is usually great. Some of these trade words have become so popular that they have been taken into the fold, but the makers of dictionaries are sceptics, and must be fully convinced of the lasting qual-

A striking example of this class is the name used for a popular pyroxyline material. The word was copyrighted, but was so well known in business that the dictionary people felt justified in giving it a place in their book. But while some inventors would have been pleased with this action, the pyroxyline material patentees objected, on the ground that their compound was patented and should be fully described and not gastronomic world. "San Juan steak," "Manila stew" and "Maine shortcake" are among the "dishes" which the inventors wish to see incorporated in the next edition of the dictionary; and as to drinks, there is hardly a well known naval officer in the service after whom a cocktail, a smash or a julep has not been named, and in describing it the writer usually requests that mention should be made of the fact that it "was first brewed, concocted or mixed by So-and-
